

The states have a right to make state laws more strict than federal laws. The federal law typically acts as the minimum standard, and state government has the ability to make a stricter law as New Jersey has done in the Environmental laws. New Jersey's EPA promulgated stricter regulations than the federal standard. The FCC is clearly overstepping their regulatory authority.